Vindictiveness never settled anything right. And analysis will show there is a lot of vindictiveness in many a reform movement. One doesn't make men better by hate.

Furs Fascinate Women
From the earliest times furs have had a remarkable fascination for women. The women of ancient Greece, Rome and Assyria all made lavish use of furs.

REFRIGERATORS

DRY AIR SYSTEM
REFRIGERATOR

The Big Difference In Refrigerators

The main object of any refrigerator, of course, is the preservation of foods. The refrigerator that will keep foods in perfect condition longest is naturally the refrigerator you want—provided it doesn't increase your ice bills.

The Herrick answers those requirements with facts—not claims. And it does even more. It actually decreases your ice bills while giving you more effective food preservation.

And why? Simply because the Herrick is far more than an ice box—far more than a cold storage place. It is built on the scientifically demonstrated principle that more than merely cold air is necessary to keep foods in good condition for any great length of time.

Perhaps the biggest essentials to scientifically correct refrigeration are—

- No. 1. Circulation of cold dry air.
- No. 2. Effective insulation.
- No. 3. Air-tight construction.

That the Herrick has these necessary essentials is a demonstrated fact. Many proofs of the truth are visible even to the least informed purchaser. Others are hidden within the walls of the refrigerator, but nevertheless there, performing their functions so important to good health and economy.

CHURCHES OF PRESIDENTS
Various Denominations to Which the Heads of the American Nation Have Belonged.

Warren G. Harding is the first member of the Baptist church to be President. Episcopalians have a plurality in White House residents. Eight Episcopalians have been President as against six Unitarians, six Presbyterians, four Methodists, two Reformed and one member of the Disciples of Christ.

In chronological order, Washington was an Episcopalian and John Adams a Unitarian. Jefferson is vaguely classified as a "liberal." While he attended the Episcopal church in the neighborhood of his home, sometimes joining in its communion, he was, nevertheless, intellectually a pronounced Unitarian.

Following Jefferson came two Episcopallians, Madison and Monroe; then John Quincy Adams, a Unitarian, and after him the first of the six Presbyterians, Jackson. In order, there followed Van Buren, Reformed; William Henry Harrison and Tyler, Episcopallians; Polk, Presbyterian; Taylor, Episcopallian; Fillmore, Unitarian. Pierce, Episcopallian, and Buchanan, Presbyterian.

Lincoln is assigned by some authorities to the Presbyterians, while others believe the Unitarians have a greater claim on him. He occasionally attended the Presbyterian church, although he was not a member.

Andrew Johnson is included among the Methodists, apparently being among those who are now described as "having their religion in their wives' names." Grant and Hayes were Methodists, and Garfield a member of the Disciples of Christ. Arthur was an Episcopallian, the last of a long line. The Presbyterians then had Cleveland, Benjamin Harrison and Cleveland again. McKinley was a Methodist.

Then came Roosevelt, the second of the Reformed presidents, who was, however, a pillar in the Episcopal church in Oyster Bay. Taft was a Unitarian and Wilson a Presbyterian. —Kansas City Star.

Distance Devouring Doctors.
A committee of doctors, appointed by the governor, has reported adversely to subsidizing rural physicians so that farming communities may be sure of prompt medical attendance. Time was when some such measure was desirable, observes the New York Herald. Too often the country doctor lost a race with death or with the stork because the ancient steed could not flounder further through rutty roads or drifted snowbanks. The automobile has made a difference. Not only does it far outstrip the old buckboard in speed, but its introduction has brought good roads in its wake. Few country districts in the state now are more than 15 minutes from the nearest. From the time that his telephone tinkles the emergency call until his hand is on the pulse of the patient he is doing 30 or 40 miles an hour, which the green cross on his car excuses in the eyes of the traffic policeman. A heroic and interesting figure in American life was the old, gray-whiskered family doctor urging Dobbin through miry ways at the call of duty. But he has gone, never to return.

Concrete for the Tornado.
If we were building a house in the country or in a small rural community in those regions where tornadoes sweep with the greatest frequency and errancy, we should like to experiment in erecting a structure composed entirely of concrete.

We have a notion that those whirling tempests peculiar to the Mississippi valley would find difficulty in yanking a concrete house loose and scattering it over the face of the country.

Perhaps we have too much confidence in the poured house, and an able-bodied tornado could turn it completely over if it could not tear it to pieces, but we should like to see the building experiment tried.

It is known, well enough, that a tornado makes no task at all of picking up a structure of timber and shaking it into fragments as a bulldog might do with a chicken. And the havoc once done in St. Louis and other towns and cities proves masonry is no great obstacle to this demon of the air. A solid concrete building might be the tornado's Waterloo. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Something Missing.
Having completed another Sahara picture in good old Hollywood, the producer invited a famous critic to have a private view, figuring that any favorable comment would make valuable advertising. As vast stretches of sand were reeled off the critic sat silent and the producer inferred that his friend was tremendously impressed. When the last expanse faded out, the producer, fishing for a compliment, ventured to suggest: "Plenty of sand, hey?"

"Yes," replied the critic, "and I was surprised to see so much sand without any bathing girls."

"Planting" Pearls.
The finest fresh water pearls are found in the shells of mussels gathered in the Mississippi river and its tributaries. Upwards of 500 varieties of mussels are found in these waters. Plans are being carried out by the United States bureau of fisheries to assure a supply of pearls in years to come. A large crop planted this year will be available about 1928. The extent of the industry is surprising. A special study of the subject is being carried on in a laboratory at Fairview, Ia., which is serving to develop the industry. —Thrill Magazine.

Only Known Animals That, Willingly and Unwillingly, Are Known to Wear Collars.

Collars are tubular articles of apparel worn about the neck by men and mules. The reason that the last named animal wears them is obvious. A collar consists of several square inches of linen made into a strangling noose and starched to add to its potency. Some are uprights, other grands and still others simply instruments.

They are of varying heights, according to the hardness of the wearer, observes a writer for the New York Sun. Some men are so hardboiled that they wear collars with protruding points in front and play a game with them. The object of the game is to prevent the points from working through the under jaw and destroying the molars. Fortunately the collar does not often win and the stretching exercises incidental to the play are beneficial.

Many good farmhands have been ruined because of a burning ambition to wear a collar perennially. The problem of the exodus to the cities might be solved by a public exposure of the implement. For some reason office slavery is called white-collar work and those who do not carry the hod are said to be white-collar workers, but this is only a flowery figure of speech, the collar that will stay white on the job not having been made.

FOURTH OF JULY.

One hundred and forty-eight years ago a small body of men met in Philadelphia and discussed the proposition to rebel against the king, and risk their lives in an effort to throw off the British yoke. On the fourth day of July, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was drawn and adopted by conference and it was signed on that day by John Hancock, the president of the convention and Charles Thompson, secretary. The actual signing of the document by representatives of states did not actually occur until some months later and when it was done the men knew they were outlaws with a price on their heads, because it was red revolution. It meant something to sign that document. It took courage; a willingness to die if necessary, for conscience and for country. That document meant this: "King George, we do not want you any longer to be our ruler. England, we will pay you no more tribute. From this day forward we will be an independent power in the world and we defy you and all the rest of the world to prevent our being what we wish to be." Thus was democracy born in the world.

History moves in mysterious cycles, and the man who has learned his best lessons in the harsh school of experience is not averse to profiting from the experience of others. We, of 1924 can profit from that of the shrewd patriots of 1776, who sought and gained political independence and bequeathed it to us.

Once the movement for a new America was started, a wise old leader advised the factions that they had their choice of hanging together or hanging separately. It was, and is, good advice. This must continue to be a government of and by the people whatever results may be—else no man can foretell what may happen. Almost every system and condition in life has changed since our forefathers gave up their lives for a theory—an experiment, then considered the "reddest" thing in the history of the world. And, yet in no other land and in no other time has the individual enjoyed such blessings as he enjoys today in our own America.

We need, not more independence, but more realization of interdependence. We can develop calmly, smoothly, rationally, or we can exterminate each other, so that none will benefit. The first course is easier and the results are more pleasing. Let us stick to the original principles, and this Fourth of July renew our allegiance to the Declaration of Independence.

Washington and Ottawa, the capitals of the United States and Canada, were connected last week by through train service for the first time in history.

As a step in its program of farm relief, the Egyptian government announces it has placed bids in the American market for 28,500 tons of commercial fertilizer, which will be distributed among small farmers.

BOXING CONTEST

Five Big Events on Armory Program for Friday Night.

Altho considerably handicapped in final arrangements by the call to service in the areas devastated by the cyclone last week, the promoters of the Armory Athletic club have succeeded in lining up a real, first class, crowd pleasing, program of boxing bouts for the evening of the third.

Five high grade bouts, consisting of three four round preliminaries and an eight round semi-final and a ten round for the headliner, have been contracted for. In all, there will be thirty rounds and every one full of pep and go.

For the curtain raiser, a bantam-weight engagement between two Circleville boys is scheduled. These lads are K. O. Brown and Bob Conrad, and they each have a local following of those that have seen them in action and know what they do. The weight will be 118 pounds.

The second bout is a return engagement. Battling Toles, our own local heavyweight has so greatly pleased fans in former shows, will again meet K. O. Barsdale of Columbus. These boys met six weeks ago at the Armory, the result being an edge of Toles. Barsdale says he is in better condition now, and a well-matched scrap should result.

Two new preliminary boys will appear in the third four round affair, that is new to Circleville. Roy Carpenter, of Columbus, meets Tazz Jeffries, of Newark, for this bout. This 125 pound match should be one to get the fans on their feet with excitement, because it will be a take 'em and give 'em affair.

An exhibition of skill, strength and speed that will be second to none is booked for the semi-final. Many local fans saw Kirk Galloway, of Columbus meet Billy Garrison, last week and they all brought back enthusiastic reports. Galloway gained the decision in this match and he put up a real scrap to do it. Thursday night Galloway will meet Doc Price, "Mansfield's Pride."

The main go is an affair that the promoters have every reason to be proud of securing. Wally Patterson has gained a large following in Old Round Town on the strength of the speed skill and nerve he has shown in his previous appearances here, and fans are glad to learn that he is to appear again. Since Patterson is beyond a doubt the best welter that ever came out of Columbus, Dayton's best has been secured for him. Reach Devlin is just a long, rangy, speedy boy as is Wally. He has met Jimmy Findlay, Yank Fredericks, Tommie Young, Johnnie Nowlin and a host of others of equal calibre. It is needless to say that Patterson has an enviable record himself because local fans already know that. He is a quick knock-out expert, who is also capable of long sustained action and he is always sure to please those who see him go in the ring.

Doc Price arrives in Circleville today and will work out at the Armory tonight at eight. Tomorrow at three, Devlin will go thru his training stunts. Here is a no opportunity for fans to see for themselves what a real entertainment is scheduled for the eve of the Fourth.

Better get tickets now while the good ones are still left, because they are going fast.

Original Water Heater

The first water heater known dates back some two thousand years. This was the "abenum" of the Romans, a crude bronze kettle with a handle for swinging over an open fire. The "foculus," an apparently later device, was a metal container into which hot stones were put to heat the water surrounding them. This seems to have been the best water heater the early Romans were able to devise.

ENTERTAINED OLD LADIES

W. C. T. U. Held Most Delightful Session at Home and Hospital.

Beautiful Flowers Presented and Splendid Program Rendered—"Flower Mission and Its Work" Was Subject With Miss Lydia Leist in Charge.

A very delightful meeting was held at the Home and Hospital Friday afternoon, when the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union met with the old ladies and held a program for them. The large living room was a bower of roses, lilies and other fragrant flowers, which was presented to the Home by the members. A large number of visitors with the members enjoyed the following program which was in charge of Miss Lydia Leist. The subject was "Flower Mission and Its Work." The opening number was a song "How Firm a Foundation," which was followed by prayer by Mrs. Bessie Long. The scripture lesson was composed of different texts used in the Flower Mission work, which was read by each one present reading one. A piano duet by Misses Mildred Riggan and Ada Burgett was splendidly given. Miss Clara Littleton then gave a very inspiring and interesting address, one that showed much thought and careful preparation her subject being "The Life and Works of Jennie Cassady," the founder of the Flower Mission Work. A leaflet "Flower Mission Trinity" was read by Mrs. Dora Warner. This brought out clearly the three lessons taught by God's wonderful gift of flowers. First, living thought—a living thoughtful God, gave us these beautiful thoughts of Him. Second, the wondrous mystery of beauty. Man can produce beautiful models of flowers but never can create the color, fragrance, or freshness of the original as God made it. Third—human agency. Flowers links us to each other, the sick to the well, the young to the old and they link us to God.

A pretty little solo was then given by little Betty Leist. Mrs. Bessie Long gave a talk on flowers, their message of God and touched on Frances E. Willard's remarkable love for them. A paper, "Truth" was read by Mrs. Sarah Wiggins. A piano solo variations of "Jesus, Pilot Me" was given by Miss Minnie Wilkerson. This concluded the program after which a short business session was held and social hour enjoyed.

Miss Adams, one of the inmates of the Home gave a recitation "The Tale of a Pig," which was wonderful for a woman of her age.

The Union presented the old ladies with ice cream and cake for their supper.

Red Frog Valued

Emitting a croak of great volume, a bright red frog has been found in the jungles of British Guiana by scientists from the New York Zoological society. The scarlet animal, it is reported, is regarded as a charm by some tropical natives. When one is caught, it is cut into as many pieces as there are warriors in the village. Each man then rubs his part over the points of his arrows in the belief that this practice will assure his weapon perfect aim.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Trained wild animals will be one of the big features of the Harris Brothers famous combined shows which exhibits in Circleville, Tuesday, July 8. Performing within an immense steel arena will be a group of black maned African lions, newly imported to America from the Carl Hagenbeck European zoological garden. In fact the zoo carried with the big show this season will contain one of the largest collections of wild animals ever exhibited in this section of the state.

MISS ELSIE JORDAN

A magnificent pageant introducing intrepid arenic performers, famous athletes, men and women champions of continental Europe and great America will inaugurate the performance of the Harris Bros. show. The big show is now in its 28th annual trans-continental tour, during which all sections of the United States and Canada will be visited. The talk of the times at home and abroad; lauded by the press; recognized by the government and industrial captains for the marvelous system by which the stupendous tented city is transported from town to town. It is no wonder, that without solicitation schools are often dismissed that the children may enjoy the most wonderful of all days—circus day.

A special train of double length railroad cars transports the Harris Bros. shows. The great organization represents an investment of nearly $400,000. Three military bands are carried 20 clowns, 30 intrepid aerialists, 40 daring equestrians and 30 sensational acrobats. The Jordan family; the Jackson sextette, the eight Micados Japanese gymnasts, the Avalon sisters and scores of other famous performers will be seen.

Remember the day and date is fixed there can be no changes, believe no false announcements to the contrary. A series of free exhibitions will be given on the show grounds at 12:30 p. m. Two performances will be given, the doors opening at 1 and 7 p. m. The big show beginning at 2 and 8 p. m. Nowhere else can so much be seen at so little cost so bring the kiddies to see a performance that is clean, instructive and inspiring.

Time to Cut Wood

The forest products laboratory says that the time of cutting wood has very little effect upon its durability if the timber is properly cared for afterward. Late fall or winter cutting is simplest, as the wood seasons more slowly and with less checking, and by warm weather is seasoned enough to be less susceptible to borers and fungi. There is, however, practically no difference in moisture content of green wood in winter and summer.

CARABAO CALLED IT A DAY

Animal Wringingly Made Three Daily Trips to the Well, but Absolutely Refused the Fourth.

Our water supply on Bongao island in the Sulu archipelago was obtained from a well that had been dug by our Spanish predecessors. It penetrated to the underlying coral rock and gave up water so brackish that we at an early date went back to the high ground and tried to find a fresh supply. We found it about a mile from the shore and sufficient in quantity for all purposes. I sent up to Jolo by the next steamer for a water cart and a carabao, and in time a huge carabao bull with a 150-gallon cart was added to our colony. He was as usual a stolid but cheerful animal, insured to any amount of labor; but we soon found that three trips a day gave us a sufficient supply for all our needs.

This continued for about one month with no variation, when for some reason it became necessary to increase the supply. We then found that the carabao declined to make the fourth trip and nothing would affect him—bribes, punishment or torture of any kind. He simply lay on the ground and chewed his cud and placidly declined to move. He had made up his mind that three cartloads of water were sufficient for any well-regulated garrison and declined to make any further effort. The next morning he was perfectly willing to bring in another three loads, but nothing would induce him to bring in a fourth. He was perfectly willing to allow a barrel to be slung on the cart and have his load increased to that extent but another trip he would not make.—Sydney A. Cloman in the World's Work.

ODD SOURCE OF INSPIRATION

Beethoven Said to Have Found Motif in the Persistent Sound of Door Knocker.

To an ordinary mind it would scarcely seem possible that much music could be got out of a door-knocker. Yet it was this sound which is said to have inspired Beethoven's glorious violin concerto in D. As the musician lay awake one night shaping the concerto in his mind, his musings were interrupted by a belated neighbor who was endeavoring to arouse his housekeeper and get her to come down and let him in. Beethoven heard his persistent knocking for admission—four slow deliberate knocks at a time. The constant repetition gave the composer the idea he sought and those four knocks were heard all through the opening movement of the concerto, which begins with four unaccompanied D's on the drum—seemingly as unmelodious and unpromising an opening phrase as one could imagine. In commenting upon the circumstance Sir George Grove has said "those four knocks were to Beethoven what the hulk of the old Temeraire was to Turner, or the daffodils to Wordsworth—commonplace in themselves, but transmuted by the fire of genius into an imperishable monument."

Vanishing American Birds.

One of the most remarkable exhibits in the habitat group in the American Museum of Natural History is the nest of a duck hawk on a shelving rock on the Palisades, with the rocky rampart of nature stretching in the background and the placid river below.

It deserves to be ranked as a work of art—this glimpse of the bird life of New York's beauty spot—as, in fact, do all the exhibits in the habitat group. As one enters the booth in which the scene is installed, one finds it hard to believe that he is looking at the combined work of the artificer and the painter, and not on the actual shelving rock hundreds of feet above the Hudson, with the mother-bird poised in the summer air, hovering over the nest with the food for her young grasped in her claws.

And the duck hawk is still to be found—or was to be found there in 1908, when three pairs were nesting across the river from the city's hub-bub.—Exchange.

Thought Beau Was for Her.

Nine-year-old Marian is her Aunt Marian's pet. And whenever auntie, who is a successful young business woman, buys herself any luxury she buys one for Marian, too.

For instance, when she bought an umbrella for herself she bought Marian a parasol. She bought a bicycle to journey to business, and Marian a tricycle. She bought a big rocking chair for herself, and Marian a little one.

The other evening she came home with a new admirer, who was one of those fellows whom nature has made of the diminutive order.

For a minute Marian eyed him, and then she asked: "All right, auntie; I like him. But where's yours?"

How It Looked to Him.

"Do tell me something about the play," she said to the young man.

"They said the climax was superb."

"Yes, I am inclined to think it was very good," said Percy.

"Can't you describe it to me?" she asked.

"Well, the heroine came stealthily on the stage and knelt, dagger in hand, behind a clump of ribbons. The hero emerged from a large bunch of purple flowers and as soon as she perceived him she fell upon him, stabbed him and sank half-conscious into a very handsome algrette. This may sound queer, but the woman in front of me wouldn't remove her hat and that's how it looked."

BABY DROWNED

Nine Months' Old Child Fell Into an Open Well Sunday.

William Schreck, the nine months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schreck, tenants on the Guy Arledge farm southwest of Kingston just off the Columbus pike, fell into an open well Sunday afternoon and drowned. The mother had just drawn some water from the well and missed her child shortly after she reached the house. Hearing the cries of the child she ran to the well and found her baby in the water. She tried to rescue the child, but it was dead when she climbed into the well. It is thought that the child was killed by the fall.

The rosary of religious services is named for the rose, crushed roses, according to chroniclers, having been strung before the advent of beads. And we are told that the expression, "sub rosa" came about because the Romans used to paint a large rose on the ceiling of their banquet halls as a reminder to those present that what occurred was not to be repeated.

"LIKE MOTHER USED TO MAKE"

By ETHEL A. LYONS

CLARISSA leaned forward in the rosy light of the candles, a so-lit expression on her round little face.

"No, Mother Eames, you're not to do one thing about Roger's birthday dinner this year."

"But, my dear, I'd love to do it," Mother Eames protested. "You must let me make the cake, anyway."

"Indeed, no!" Clarissa gave a little gesture of finality. "It's all planned, and I'm going to do every single thing by myself." The bride of six months looked very wise and determined.

"Come on, Roger, we'll be late for the concert if we don't hurry."

Roger rose obediently, but his face was troubled as he bestowed a good-night kiss on his mother's cheek. He could guess the sacrifice it might mean to her to give up all the happy fussing over his birthday. On the other hand, he couldn't tell Clarissa that he'd rather let his mother do this for him. Oh, well, it was one of the things that were bound to happen, and he soon dismissed it from his mind.

Not so Mother Eames. She responded cheerfully enough to the good-night kiss, but she sat for a long time staring at the candles after the outer door had closed.

Here it was Sunday; the birthday would be Tuesday, and already the ice cream had been ordered from Riss's—Roger's favorite—vanilla with powdered almonds and a very wonderful caramel sauce.

Monday passed. Tuesday morning found Mother Eames in the kitchen just as the maid was building the fire in the range. "Hilda," she said, "take the day off. I want the kitchen to myself."

Nothing loth, Hilda obeyed.

And a few doors down the street Clarissa was saying: "Anna, this is Mr. Eames' birthday, and I want to get the whole dinner by myself."

At 5:30 Mother Eames, mindful of her promise to appear early at Clarissa's, cautioned father not to be late to the dinner, and went swiftly down the street. The winter twilight had deepened into darkness, but there was no sign of a light at Roger's. Strange! Clarissa must be putting a few finishing touches to the dinner. She'd go around to the kitchen door.

No light in the kitchen, either! After a preliminary knock she opened the door and stepped in. In the faint glow from the range she could make out the form of Clarissa, apron-clad, sobbing convulsively at the kitchen table.

"Why, dear child, what's the matter?" Mother Eames' arms were around the wee-begone little figure instantly.

"Oh, Mother, Mother Eames!" Clarissa spoke with difficulty. "It's dreadful! It's almost dinner time, and there isn't any dinner. I've spoiled just everything! Even the cake! Look!"

Tragically she led the way to the pantry. The cake was indeed a sorry sight! Rough, hard lumps of icing covered its uneven surface, with here and there a ragged burned edge showing through. Dumbly she pointed to the ice box. A few anemic pieces of chicken were floating about in a liquid, presumably meant for aspic jelly. This was flanked by a dish of curdled mayonnaise, and the garbage pail offered evidence of scorched cream soup.

"Stop crying, Clarissa. Go bathe your face and powder your nose. Put on your prettiest dress and a big apron, and come back to the kitchen." Mother Eames' voice was brisk now.

Clarissa was only too glad to do as she was bade. As she reappeared Mother Eames was just entering the back door, a huge market basket on her arm. Laying aside the white cloth cover, she deftly removed the contents of the basket to the table. A thick, juicy steak, a bag of Bermuda onions (steak smothered in onions, she explained, Roger's best dish), lettuce, washed and crisp, all ready for the table, and, last of all—a cake, four tiers high, its icing smooth, glistening, perfect!

"Oh, Mother Eames, this is wonderful, perfectly wonderful!" Clarissa cried. "But I don't deserve it, I must confess. I wasn't nearly so much concerned with your being tired as I was with showing Roger that I could do everything just exactly as well as his mother could. He's always boasting about your cooking, you know."

Mother Eames smiled a dry little smile. "Since confessions are in order, I must make one myself. I'm afraid in my wicked heart I've been hoping and hoping that something like this would happen. That's why I made the cake and ordered Roger's favorite dinner and the ice cream. Don't dare breathe a word of this to him. I'm so ashamed, and now we're—"

"Quits!" Clarissa's laugh was actually merry, her cares forgotten. "It's worth it," she added. "We'll always understand now, won't we, mother?"

Dinner was over. Roger leaned back in his chair with a contented sigh.

"With all respect to your abilities, Mom," he began lazily, "I'd like to see this dinner beaten anywhere. And I must confess," he grinned, looking slyly toward Clarissa, "that I expected something entirely different—chicken in aspic, or some such fol-de-rol."

And if Clarissa blushed, he attributed it to pleasure at his whole-hearted compliment to the dinner.

Sacred Horses in Jap Park.

In the famed park in Nara, Japan, there is a sacred horse. This shaggy, undersized animal is said to be about the funniest thing in Japan. He is pure white, and has one blue eye and one pink eye. He is kept in a small stable with a square hole for him to poke out his head to eat the oats which tourists bring him. The third largest bell in Japan hangs in Nara park, which contains 1,250 acres, and throughout which more than 3,000 stone and metal lanterns are scattered. Six hundred tame deer roam at will in the park.

Also in Nara park there is one of the three gigantic bronze Buddhas, and the largest. The others are at Osaka and Kamakura. One of the most venerated of Shinto shrines—Kasuga no Miya—is the goal of thousands of pilgrims every year. It has existed for 1,210 years.

Paris Passes on Mode for Spring

Plaits Are in Favor; Skirts Shorter; Dresses Have Matching Coats.

After years of scarcely perceptible changes last season brought about a radical modification in the outline of dress. The two parallel lines which constitute the feminine silhouette broadened slightly toward the bottom to form the shaped skirt. The same contour characterizes the spring mode, even shorter, and it is only in the details of the costume that any appreciable departure from the previous season can be noted, asserts a Paris fashion writer in the New York Tribune. The Patou models are an exemplification of the artistry of the designer, diversifying the unchanged line with an adept manipulation of flounce, plait and panel.

Skirts have been decidedly shortened—their average length varies from ten to twelve inches above the ground. In combination with the simple line of the skirt these short lengths endow the wearer with the appearance of a sixteen-year-old girl—at least when viewed from the back.

In the Patou spring collection are three basic keynotes. First, there is the shaped flounce, which preserves its preponderant role in the formal evening gown—it becomes more complicated, it tapers, it undulates—but it remains the outstanding feature of this type of dress.

Plaits in Limelight.
Second, and of greatest importance, are plaits. The plaited dress in all its forms is a distinct manifestation of the season and finds varied expression in the tailor-made costume, the summer frock and in dresses for the seaside and spa. Patou has placed marked emphasis upon novel plaitings, and they are used in numberless ways on frocks, cloaks and jackets, even for linings.

The amalgamation of the plaited form with the shaped form will in all probability lead to a return to the fashions of the 1887-'90 period. But "les elegantes" may be reassured; they will not be transformed into modern de Maupassant heroines, for the return to the '80s will be highly modernized. The shaped flounce will diminish in size, but in order to give it volume it will be plaited. On long, simple tunics it amplifies the lower part of the silhouette—a forecast of the fashions of tomorrow.

The third fundamental characteristic of the Patou showing is the ensemble—a combination of ingenious outlines, with harmonizing or soft blending colors. It is an inseparable whole, the final theme of innumerable variations, and is particularly noteworthy in sports frocks, afternoon gowns and evening robes, most of which are combined with a cloak intended to be worn as an integral part of the costume.

The ensembles du soir chez Patou are very lovely. The long evening wraps are richly embroidered or trimmed with costly furs such as sable and chinchilla and the dresses are equally beautiful. One model shows a gown of green artificial satin elaborately embroidered in gold, silver and copper threads. The wrap is black and is lined with the green satin of the gown.

Cape of Red Velvet.
Another shows a cape developed in a beautiful shade of bright red velvet with a huge collar of chinchilla fur, and a dress of crepe romaine in the same vivid red. The cascading panel at the left side is ornamented with a spray of paradise dyed to match the dress. A very striking ensemble shows a green velvet wrap with a sable collar and a dress of gold net, embroidered in turquoise blue and gold beads and gold and old rose threads.

The range of spring and summer afternoon gowns is much more extensive than that for winter wear. This year the three-piece gown has disappeared from the fashions of Patou. It has been replaced by the tailored gown and by the afternoon ensemble consisting of a dress and coat especially designed to be worn together. Plaiting, the inevitable method of ornamentation, is the principal trimming note on this type of costume.

Nearly all the tailored suits rely upon plaiting in some form for their elaboration. Stitched plaits in band form, side plaits forming panels, wide, inverted plaits stitched three-quarters of their length and then allowed to hang freely, and box plaits are noteworthy. Plaits are also used as a trimming for jackets, and the same ideas are carried out in the skirt.

The sports costume has attained a position of primary importance in the modes of spring and summer. The models of Patou are always very simple and chic, principally because of the character of the materials. Particularly adapted to tennis are skirts with multiple plaits worn with sweaters in frills—a new and very successful fabric, the richness of whose tints is very pleasing to the eye under the glare of the summer sun. Other sports costumes in more neutral and delicate tones are carried out in English chevrons and men's woolen suitings.

Leather is the predominant fabric for motor cloaks and the newest models are developed in bright shades of red and blue.

New Necklines.
The lack of variety in the spring silhouette has thrown the burden of the new mode upon the details of dress, which, as a consequence, know no restraining mandates. The neckline in particular has been subjected to varied manipulations by the leading designers of Paris.

Chanel shows a decided change in the neckline—a departure from the bateau form. In fact, she entirely neglects this type. In her collection are many round necklines, particularly in evening dresses, the back being cut much deeper than the front, frequently to below the shoulder blades.

In daytime dresses the soft, rolling collar is much featured by this designer—a contrast to the long, revers-like shawl collars which appear on her jumper sports dresses. On afternoon frocks of crepe de chine or printed mousseline the slightly rounding neckline is headed by a narrow band of the material which ties on the left shoulder, center front or half-way between, according to the cut of the dress.

The bateau neckline is also non grata with Agnes, whose every model exploits a collar, or at least a suggestion thereof. Most of these collars are small and round and of the lingerie type. Organdie, linen and silk are the fabrics employed.

Georgette and Patou are nonpartisan. The short, round line, the bateau neck and the V neckline are treated with equal impartiality in these collections. Jenny also varies the line, but shows a marked tendency toward the V cut, particularly in blouses.

The scarf, of course, is the piece de resistance of the spring neckline. In the collection of Chanel this decorative note is unusually significant. Almost every evening gown has its accompanying scarf, always of the same material, and varying in length from the short, stubby scarf to the long and flowing type. Only in a few instances does it form an inseparable part of the dress. An evening gown of black lace with round décolletage shows the scarf drawn across the front and attached at each shoulder, while the ends are allowed to hang freely. A cluster of pink roses is placed on either shoulder where the scarf is attached.

The spring collection of one prominent French designer emphasizes strongly the straight and slender silhouette. All models show extremely straight backs and in nearly every instance an unbroken line from shoulder to hem. With a few exceptions, all ornamentation appears in the front, and any suggestion of a waistline is given through the hanging of shirred, finely plaited or tiny tucked apron fronts or flowing panels. In such instances the waistline is low, but the dress proper very straight, tight-fitting and short, seemingly appropriate only for the most slender, youthful figure. In daytime dresses, whether of wool or silk, the sleeves, which are set in, are long and tight-fitting and in most cases entirely plain.

Clips for the Bib
The baby's bib will stay in place more firmly if held by little clips of silver. These clips are fastened together with a fine silver chain. Some are in the shape of tiny teddy bears, others are oval with little faces etched upon them.

Old Folks in England
Who Travel by Proxy

We had the Old Folks Reunion Tea in our village a few weeks ago—an annual event arranged by the local branch of the Woman's Institute, where all people more than sixty years old are invited and given a really good meal, followed by a concert which includes the old songs they love to hear.

The interval between the tea and the concert is always occupied by a few minutes' chat by the fire, when the group of "oldsters" congregate and exchange reminiscences. This to a outsider is the most interesting part of the evening.

"Last time I heard from him he had got a nice apartment just near the Chateau Frontenac," was a phrase that caught my ear. A hale old man of seventy was discussing his son in Quebec—a man who had done well in the real estate business since he left the village thirty years ago.

And, without shame (for the conversation was general), I listened in to a little group of old men and women near the fire who were discussing sons and daughters who had left their homes and were seeking happy futures abroad.

They talked, with a real local knowledge, acquired from treasured letters, of such places as Hobart, Victoria, Vancouver, Montreal, Auckland, the Falkland Islands, Quebec, and other places thousands of miles away.

The letters they treasure from their wanderers are full of interest and crammed with news of the town and country they have made their home, and these oldsters, narrow and circumscribed though their physical outlook may be, have a wide fund of knowledge, and know at second-hand places that are but romantic names to the majority of us.—London Mail.

A Misuse of Talent.
"Some of the smartest men I have ever known," says a great merchant, "were criminals. But I have never known a dishonest man who could not have been much more successful if on the square. There is more honesty in business than there is in other things." "Big business requires team work on a gigantic scale. Even a dishonest business man wouldn't want a dishonest cashier, or a dishonest clerk, or a dishonest secretary, would he? Crooks have to work in squads of one or two—at any rate, in such small squads that they can always watch each other."—Fred Kelly in the Nation's Business.

Queer Pets of Poets; Rossetti Liked Wombat

One of the most romantic as well as one of the greatest figures of Victorian times was Dante Gabriel Rossetti, for he was in the very front rank both as a painter and a poet. But, like many other men of genius, he had some peculiarities, among them a love of strange pets, which he kept mostly in his big garden behind No. 10 Cheyne Walk.

At one time or another he possessed a wombat, a woodchuck, an armadillo, a racoon, a kangaroo, a deer, a chameleon, a salamander and even a zebu, the sacred cow of India.

The wombat was probably the favorite and enjoyed most privileges, being accustomed to sleep on the epergne in the middle of the dinner table, quite undisturbed by lights or conversation. On one occasion it took advantage of an absorbing discussion to help itself to expensive cigars. It chewed up a boxful!

Tennyson wrote several poems on the owl, as other poets do on nightingales and skylarks. One night, sitting at the attic window in his father's country rectory, he heard the cry of a young owl, and imitated it so well that the bird came to him. From that moment it became a household pet. Its fate was a sad one, however, for it was drowned in a well.

The nearest and dearest pet Burns ever possessed was a sheep, which he called Maillie. He wrote two poems to Maillie after her death. The sheep used to follow the poet everywhere, and would run with the speed of a greyhound to meet her master.

Cowper's three hares, Puss, Tiny and Bess, belong to literature, for he tells their story in his imitable letters. Puss was his companion for eleven years and eleven months. She was in the habit of pulling his hair when he wanted to go for a walk. Tiny was a bad-tempered little beast, responding to caresses with snaps and grunts. Bess was gentle and affectionate. The three enjoyed a nightly romp on the poet's parlor carpet.—London Answers.

Device Aids Musicians

We are told that the human wind power is capable of a continued sound emission over not more than three or four bars of music. Yet many operas have sustained passages of many more bars. In order to aid players of wind instruments in the orchestras or bands to overcome the difficulties incident to playing such passages an inventor has devised what is known as the "aerphor." The device consists of a foot bellows, containing a water chamber and electric light bulb, from which the air, moistened and warmed to the degree of the human breath, is forced through a length of rubber tubing equipped with a stop valve to a mouthpiece fitted into the corner of the mouth. As the soft palate of the player is automatically closed while he plays, he receives the artificial current of air, which circles around in the mouth and out through the lips to the mouthpiece of the instrument. Not only may he sustain the tone of the instrument, but he may perform the most ornate cadenza, while he breathes through his nostrils independently.

About Love

Barret Wendell, the brilliant critic, was talking about love.

"Good writers," he said, "never treat love as an immortal and divine thing. Poor writers always do so.

"Poor writers go on about love ridiculously. They are like young Jack Hoskins.

"I like you, Mr. Hoskins," a pretty girl said to young Jack, "but I like Mr. Hemingway, too. Mr. Hemingway," she added, with a simper, "says he thinks about me 365 days in the year."

"Huh! He wants one day off every four years, does he?" said Jack Hoskins. "Surely, Miss Fetherstonhaugh—Ethel—surely you don't compare a lukewarm attachment like that to a burning passion such as mine."

Has Purest Gold Coin

The three most common silver standards are 835, 900 and 925, the latter called sterling silver. Our country, France, Germany, Japan, Russia, Sweden and others, use the 900-parts-gold-and-100-parts-copper purity; while England, India, Portugal, Brazil, Turkey and others issue their gold coin upon the 22-carat basis (916 2/3 fine). Probably the purest coin of modern times is the Austrian gold ducat which assays 986 fine. It is generally accepted that a fineness of from 835 to 925 is best for coinage purposes. With pure copper as alloying element coins of these purities hold the color well and resist abrasion sufficiently to make it a most satisfactory circulating medium.

Bobbed Hair Permanent Fad

Regardless of the dictates of fashion concerning bobbed heads for women it is apparent that many hairdressers agree with the flappers that the "bob" is here to stay, says the New York Sun and Globe.

This is particularly evident in some of the "almost a city in itself" sections uptown, for there the barber shops, formerly the impregnable retreats of men, have brazenly deserted to the women. Signs in their windows announce prices for all kinds of "bobs" and strong pleas are made for the patronage of the fair sex. In fact, so much does one barber consider that his trade lies with the women that he has already dismissed the pretty little blonde manicurist who formerly was an inducement to bring in male customers.

WOMEN WRITERS

Critics Say They Do Best Job of Recording Sentiment.

Women are writing better novels than men, states Marguerite Moore Marshall in the July International Book Review. The chief reason assigned for this new triumph of the gentler sex is that they know life better.

American women are writing our best fiction," Miss Marshall asserts. "One is convinced of it especially after an extensive and intensive course of reading that has been done both for pleasure and for purposes of criticism. The obvious question remains—"Why?"

"Is not the first point to be made in favor of the woman writer her superior honesty about life?"

"There are at least four favorite points around which the illusions of today's novelists cluster: (1) women; (2) maternity; (3), the absorbing interest of any physical sex-relationship (4) the importance of adolescence.

"In these matters the American woman writer seems less inclined to cheat herself. Being a woman she can do 'an inside job' of feminine psychology, and she can create heroines without falling in love with them and therefore trying to foist upon the reader an idealized conception.

"Perhaps there is a good Freudian reason why men seldom write of motherhood in terms of simplicity and realism, and it has been left the woman novelist to show the mother functioning normally; to show the pain, drudgery, irritation, that are apparently inescapable working conditions of the job.

"Perhaps the better woman novelist can afford to spend time on their style and their background because there are several things which they are not trying to do. They do not apparently, seek to uplift anybody. Neither is their mission in life to haunt, to startle and waylay—in two words, to shock.

"Yet their sense of value holds true. They never get drunk on detail. Background is not allowed to swamp plot and character; a collection of data on interior decorating in mean houses, to usurp the place of a collection of souls.

"It is because our women novelists are not content with surface-photography that their books are so close-knit in texture. There are, one is given to understand, 'business' reasons for knitting tales loose instead of tight. Which brings one to the rather delicate point—is it possible that our women writers are not 'good business men'?

"Granting this possibility do we find in it one of the reasons why the women are doing better work? They are not, thank heaven! starving in a garret for art's sake; neither do they seem to be writing too much, too hurriedly, too cheaply, for money's sake. They appear comparatively free from the Hollywood complex."

Verse the Proof.

Verse is the final proof to the poet that his mastery over his art is complete. It is the shutting up of his powers in "measured content"; the answer of form to his spirit; of strength and ease to his guidance. . . . Poetry, in its complete sympathy with beauty, must of necessity leave no sense of the beautiful, and no power over its forms, unmanifested; and verse flows as inevitably from this condition of its integrity as other laws of proportion do from any other kind of embodiment of beauty.—Leigh Hunt.

Fish Require Vitamins.

Fish need vitamins no less than do men. Recent experiments have shown that fish fed on a diet free or nearly free of these substances showed an exceptionally high mortality as compared with similar fish given a diet in which vitamins were abundant. Lack of vitamins, however, did not seem to interfere with the growth of the fish as a similar lack does with the growth of animals; but the fish developed severe nervous symptoms, ending in fits, which resulted in their death from exhaustion.

Mercator's Projection.

Mercator's Projection is a map of the world devised by Gerard Kauffmann, whose surname, Latinized, was Mercator (The Merchant). It is a cylindrical projection in which all the meridians are straight lines perpendicular to the equator, and all the parallels are straight lines parallel to the equator. As a result, the shapes of countries are greatly distorted, and the polar regions, especially, immensely exaggerated. Mercator's Projection was published in 1566 and applied to navigation about 1599.

Ouch!

Dining out one night during his recent visit to London, Paderewski met a young society man who had won for himself a great reputation for his skill at polo. Being praised by the pianist for his clever playing, he said it was different, indeed, from Paderewski's performances. "Yes," agreed Paderewski, "the difference between us is perfectly clear. You are a dear soul who plays polo, whilst I am a poor Pole who plays solo."
